

A contemporary Pop Artist with direct succession from Andy Warhol, DeVon emerged into the spotlight. Through collaboration and mentoring with the late Steve Kaufman, former art assistant to Andy Warhol, DeVon traces his artist lineage directly back to the father of American Pop Art, and carries the torch into the twenty-first century. DeVon immerses his audience into one of the most popular, expansive, and culturally permeating movements in our lifetime. Chances are that DeVon's work has touched on one of your hero's, vividly exploring the world of pop culture, comics, TV, movies, rock-and-roll, and the who's who of cool.

Since moving into the spotlight, DeVon's work has been the subject of over 60 solo artist shows spanning the globe, making its way into museums, important private and corporate collections and deep into the heart of art lovers everywhere.

Sharing the same ground with twentieth century pop artists, DeVon merges painting with photography and other mixed media. He contextualizes new meaning from nostalgic icons by collaging the pages of modern magazines and books, and submerges his many layers in a thick glossy resin. The final layer of his work is often strewn with paint splatter and encrusted with diamond dust, glitter and jewels. As his predecessors Andy Warhol, Lichtenstein, and others successfully elevated the so called "low art" of comics, and every day consumer society, into "high art", DeVon makes parodies of the same appropriated content, elevating the same images into even higher "other worldly" realms, Gods and Goddesses, and iconic secular saints. He offers a witty view of modern society, filled with a strong sense of optimism. The finished pieces tell an emotional story, our favorite story, the story of the hero's journey, which after all, is our own journey.
